Logan C. Murray's Resignation from the United States.

Financial circles were surprised this morn ing at the announcement that Silas B. Dutcher had resigned from the presidency of the Union Dime Savings Bank and that a plete change had been made in the officers of the institution. At the annual meeting of the Trustees yes-

The trustees remain the same, with the exception of the addition of James H. Rodgers, of the Hotel Cascleton, Staten Island.
Treasurer-elect Sprague, the former Secretary, said to an Evening World reprter this morning:

morning:

"There has been no change in the management of the bank, and the changes are really promotions of old officials.

"Mr. Dutcher desired to be relieved from the duties of the presidency, as he wishes to give his time and attention to the New Hamilton Trust Company, of Brooklyn, of which he has been elected President.

"This of course necessitated a change in the administration, and Mr. Chapin, the former Treasurer, was elected in Mr. Dutcher's stead.

His Story Told to the Coroner's Jury -Other Possible Identifications,

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
TARRYTOWN, June 26.—Frank Atwood, the travelling salesman from Philadelphia, is certain to-day that the body of the beautiful woman who committed suicide by drowning at Croton, last Friday night, is that of his long-lost wife. His identification last night was positive; and on closer inspection of the body and hear-ing all the details of the tragedy, his belief in her identity is to-day confirmed. To an Evening Woman reporter Atwood said this morning that he should claim the dead woman's body and take it to Philadelphia for burial as soon as the Coroner would

The Coroner says that he shall require more than Atwood's unsupported evidence of the woman's identity. He has brought no photograph of his wife and appears very reluctant to name any people who knew her. The Coroner's jury was called together this norning, and Atwood repeated the story he told the Coroner last night. The only thing that shook his faith in the identification of the body was the letter signed "M. E. J.," in which words are misspelled, and the handwriting is different from that of Mrs. At-

He named Druggist Brown, corner of Fulton and Water streets, New York, as a former acquaintance of his wife. Atwood did not think his wife had ever lived former acquaintance of his wite.

Atwood did not think his wife had ever lived in New York prior to their marriage.

Atwood's story, as told to the jury, was that he was a traveiling hardware salesman for Whit, Post & Co., Cleveland, O.

While traveiling on a local train between Philadelphia and Germantown, about 1887, he met a young woman who gave her name, as Miss Purcell Marini. The acquaintance ripened into love, and though he knew nothing of the girl's antecedents or history he married her.

She had told him that her parents were wealthy, but that she left home owing to a quarrel. He accepted her assertion that she had never done any wrong.

They went to live at 11 Vine street, Philadelphia, where their daughter Louise was born. Their home was happy, although his business frequently compelled him to be absent for weeks.

Two months after Louise was born he started on one of his periodical business trips. At Omaha, Neb, he received a despatch stating that his wife had suddenly left home and could not be found.

He returned to Philadelphia immediately to find Louise in the care of neighbors.

It was July 18, 1888, that the baby's mother took her into a heighbor's house with a request that the little one be cared for a few minutes. She never returned.

Atwood visited the morgues, the police searched the city; but no trace of his wife was discovered.

searched the city; but no trace of his wife was discovered.

Much of his time since has been spent in a vain search for the missing wife and mother. He has visited every part of the country to gaze at unidentified bodies of women, always taking Raby Louise with him, and it was a newspaper account of the finding of this body that brought him to Tarrytown yesterday, hoping against hope that his long search would be ended.

When he saw the body of Dolly Davis's double he had no doubt that it was that of his long-lost wife.

Death ended the agonies of Prof. John J Northrop, of Columbia College, at 4 o'clock this morning. The story of the accident in which he was fatally burned by an explosion of a barrel of alcohol was told in the Special Racing edition of THE EVENING WORLD YES

Dr. Northrop, who was Instructor in Zoology at the Columbia School of Mines was supervising some work being done in the basement of the School of Mines, at Forty ninth street and Park avenue, by Janitor William Simpson and his assistant, Thomas Tighe. Prof. Northrop was taken to the Presby terian Hospital, where he suffered intensely till the end came. Inspectors went around yesterday among the tenement-houses in the strict and the stricts, questioning the residents about the smells and stenches against which such bitter complaint has been raised.

Very little odor was perceptible from the Standard Gaslight Company's works yesterday although the wind was in the right direction to waft the attenches over the city if there had been any of the oil refuse iring around.

The Company's agents are shrewd, however, and, bowing to the public demand, every means has been utilized to kill the bad smells which were formerly let loose in the neighborhood. Lime and other chemicals are used to disinfect the oil refuse, and everything combustible is burned.
